The figure of muscovite (described on page 39) in the thin sections examined under the microscope consists of two hyperbola? coming and going in the field as the stage is turned. No lemniscates appear for the reason that the section is too thin to show them. The hyperbola? in the muscovite figure go well apart from each other in accordance with the value for 2V, 40 to 44. The curly maple look is seen on muscovite between crossed nicols in sections not parallel to the base which carry cleavage cracks. For the recognition of muscovite the interference colors in such cases are a very great help. These are a delicate mixture of salmon-pink with dainty greens and blues. In brief, then, we depend upon the curly maple look, upon the figures with convergent light, and upon the colors in ordinary light and with crossed nicols for telling biotite and muscovite. The colors of biotite in ordinary light, brown, yellow, and green, are not peculiar to this mineral, but certain shades of them which the student will learn to recognize for himself are valuable means for telling it. Finally it is to be noted that the extinction in the micas is always parallel or very nearly parallel to the cleavage cracks. Biotite in ordinary light as the...
