Not illustrated. 1856 Excerpt: .presumption, there was a calm concentradness about him which gave the idea of his being one of the few who had an opinion of his own on all points, on which his mind being thoroughly made up by it he fully intended to abide; there was a quiet selfrespect about him, which was apparent even through the negligent ease of manner beneath which it lay half veiled. My own opinion is that Adela was the smallest bit in the world afraid of him, and besides Adela was a coquette, and to flirt with Aubrey Clayton was utterly impossible. Miss Grey had been absent from home when the two young men had first arrived at Alton Park, and now to make up for the lost time she had been invited to spend a few days likewise there. Even thoughtless Adela was struck with the rapid advances towards friendship (it is a convenient name) which Ethel and Mr. Clayton had already made; but they seemed to suit one another very well, and Adela used to feel thankful for Frank s society to entertain her, whilst they, with Ronald Vere for their companion, were in the habit of discussing deeper thing than suited the capricious little beauty, who cared but little for intellectual conversation of any kind. Ida was not often of the party; Lady Charlotte was very strict on the subject of education, and Ida was now receiving the finishing touches just then deemed necessary to bring it...
