They had become sufficiently active so that confinement in a cage was necessary. The body temperature rose and food was consumed with apparent relish. It is also significant that the cats with high transection showed very little recovery in the post-operative period--in fact, several died--and the level of blood pressure in those that lived was low. In every case of unusually low blood pressure before anemia of the brain, there were concomitant manifestations of indisposition. Evidence for central mechanism. The precise extent of recovery is more or less immaterial--even the question as to whether or not any recovery has occurred is, from the point of view of these experiments, of secondary importance. That a certain level of blood pressure is being maintained after transection of the cord and that this pressure is ultimately sufficient for the performance of the usual metabolic processes is...
