Edison discovered that, by inserting a straight wire into an incandescent light bulb, he could pull a current of electricity out of a vacuum, he did more than discover the Edison Effect; he discovered an inexhaustible source of free electrons. It is this inexhaustible source of free electrons which is most responsible for the enormous strides made in telephony, radio, phonography, radar, and television, to name just a few of the many branches of electronics based on free electrons. This discovery was so far ahead of any related development in electrical engineering that it was years before it was utilized and much later before its full significance was appreciated. True, Edison discovered this natural phenomenon by accident when he was looking for something else, but accidental discoveries have rescued or added to the lustre of many a famous name. The point is, Edison discovered something because he was looking. Most of us don't look. Edison investigated everything he didn't understand; and, since he was always looking, he became the greatest inventor who ever lived. The lesson is, I think, if you don't look, you won't see anything and you may get run over. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
